Managing the Growing Problem of Mold
60 Seconds

You may not think that mold is growing in your home or business, but that doesn't mean it's not there causing property damage and potential health hazards. To protect your home or business from the growing problem of mold, the CPCU Society reminds you to:

Conduct a routine inspection for water leaks on your property, paying special attention to dishwashers, refrigerators, water heaters, and areas around windows.

Repair water leaks in your home or business as soon as they develop.

Replace aging washing machine and icemaker hoses.

Keep humidity levels low in your home or business by using air conditioning and a dehumidifier.

Check the condensation pans in air conditioning and heating units to make sure that they are clean and draining properly.

Remembering these tips can help to prevent the formation or spreading of mold growth in your home or business.

The CPCU Society is a community of credentialed insurance professionals who promote excellence through ethical behavior and continuing education. The Society's 26,000 members hold the Chartered Property Casualty Underwriter (CPCU®) designation.
